

Various brilliant ideas of unionism to hold the workers together (including that of entering the society of ultra elite in disguise) proved of no avail (dice) because the workers never were in danger of falling apart. All those artifices now function in the reverse and contrary to plans, blue-prints and specifications.

They can not compete with the unions any more now than they could years ago with Herman Bieder's ice cream.

Simply because Herman Bieder had the best ice-cream.
Join the wobblies or I'll scream.

"Brittish landed in Iceland."

Good! Hope she brought her own liquor — if I know my Icelanders, they are capable of protecting the Tommies seeing as how nobody's going to attack them there. North-Pole, next.

Job-action and job-organization is the workers best trump — make your delegate system 3-ply...
Pleasant Thought:

No actual figures of the number killed on the British-French-German Fronts! Give us the data.

If the United States enters this war more actively there is no guarantee that Britain, France and Germany will not turn against Uncle Sam (competition). Give us those figures so that we may know is the war on the "up-and-up" — is the bait good enough — show us the casualties, itemized and the province of their birth, if any home.
